SIXTEEN PIGS.

A Luau for Kahunas to Make Them Guess.

The other day a peculiar bundle was found in the bay by a native. It was hauled on a dock and opened, and, much to the surprise of the assembled multitude, it was found to contain a mixture of things that clearly stamped the person who threw the bundle overboard as one of the gentry known as kahunas.

Kahunaism, as everybody knows, is a form of superstition indulged in by natives, both high and low, and, for the benefit of strangers, it may be mentioned that the package was thrown overboard to the shark-god, who is supposed to have digestive powers as hearty as the blow of a trip-hammer. The idea was to put a "hoodoo" on the new Government, but this time it did not succeed.

Kahunas had what is termed a "very soft snap" when this country had the doubtful distinction of a tottering throne. Many of them used to eat at the palace and altogether led a merry existence until the Provisional Government took the affairs of the country in hand. As a result they lost a good boarding house and if something did not turn up mighty quick they would either have to learn a trade or else seek work on the docks. The last resort did not strike them in a favorable way because the doctors all agree that they are too strong to work.

But the Kahunas are in clover again for the present at any rate, as it was learned Thursday that the ex-Queen had summoned six of the clan and a big meeting was held in a private house in this city. A genuine Hawaiian feast was served, and one of the items on the bill of fare was sixteen roast pigs. Sixteen roast pigs divided between six Kuhanas no doubt was enough food to warrant the giver to expect a favorable answer to her anxious inquiries about regaining a lost throne and a big fat salary, and other things too numerous to mention, and it is presumed in the absence of any definite information that the kahunas answered "Yes" in every in-

This story is padded out just a little, but as a matter of fact the ex-Queen was said to be present at a private house Thursday to consult with several kahunas about her lost throne. A big luan was its regular ports of call. In this is given at the same time.

MOONLIGHT COLLISION.

the Hawaii.

The steamers Kilauea Hou and Hawaii, both of Wilder & Co.'s this new avenue of business must line of steamers, collided at 11 necessarily be widespread and mao'clock on Thursday night in the terial. channel, between Lanai and Molokai, both vessels carrying headlights. The night was calm, moonlight illuminating the surface of the sea for miles around.

The Hawaii was on her way to Maui, and the Kilauea Hou was returning to Honolulu with 1000 bags of sugar and 50 head of cattle on deck. The chief officer of the Kilauea Hou was on duty on deck, while the captain and a part of the crew were sleeping below. When the two vessels collided the force of the concussion threw the men out of their bunks, and in a few minutes they were all on deck to find out what was the matter. Some thought that their vessel had run aground, while others supposed she had run against the Molokai cliffs. Nobody could tell how or where the Kilauea Hou was struck by with a large number of business the Hawaii. The rigging on the men, were Mr. Glade's guests. The port side was slightly damaged. young Kaiser's health was drunk the greatest injury, it being pagne, after which the company ripped clear down from the partook of a delicious lunch, where bowsprit to near the keel, several nothing good was left unreprefeet below the water-line. A portion of her cargo, 500 bags of sugar, was moved aft so as to lighten the fore part of the vessel, and the big cracks under the bow were covered up with canvas to keep the water out. Captain Fitzgerald ran his vessel into Kaunakakai to finish patching up the damaged part with canvas, after which he returned to Honolulu. He reported his vessel dry and the cargo safe. It is the opinion of many that had the Kilauea Hou had her full cargo nothing would have kept her afloat. After the collision the Hawaii resumed her voyage to Olowalu, and appeared to be uninjured except perhaps a few scrat-

A report comes from Maui to the effect that John Richardson and W. H. Cornwell had been circulating a petition for signatures protesting against any change in a government which does not exist, Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

MR. EDITOR: Amid the shame ess bribery and treachery that marked the closing days of the late legislative session, four native Hawaiians stood firm as rock against lavish offers of every kind, specious appeals to race feeling, the pressure of the Honolulu populace, and even the personal influence of the then sovereign.

While others went home loaded with the rewards of infamy, they returned poor in pocket but rich in honor.

These brave and honest men deserve more public recognition than they have received. Their names are Hon. J. Kauhane, Noble from Kau; Hon. J. H. Waipuilani, Representative from North Kona; Hon. Iosepa from Hana, and Hon. A. Kauhi from Ewa and Waianae.

No member of any Hawaiian legislature can show a more consistent and honorable record than Hon. J. Kauhane.

To him and his three worthy colleagues may be applied the words of Milton's encomium on Abdeil:

faithful found Among the faithless, faithful only they. Among innumerable false unmoved,

Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified. Nor number nor example with them wrought

Mr. Simpson says he has placed a cargo of 1100 tons of the products of Washington for this first trip, and has also secured a return cargo from the islands. He thinks the line will probably lose money for the first year, as it will take time to build up a profitable trade, 26 and 28 California St., San Francisco, especially in view of the opposition from San Francisco.
